Why do listening and speaking come first?

- “Listening and speaking first” is the natural language learning sequence.
- Listening and speaking require fast processing, the foundation for true fluency and “thinking in English.”
- Having good listening and speaking skills is the key to the later effective development of good reading and writing skills.
- Good listening and speaking skills are really what is needed for effective communication.

Practice listening and speaking the right way

- Use your ears . . . Free yourself from text. Heavy reliance on text support severely slows the development of good listening and speaking skills.
- Follow the DynEd 4-Step Study Path: Listen & Watch, Listen & Repeat, Listen & Speak and Record & Compare.
